This is the sequel to Avatar: The Last Airbender and a prequel to The Legend of Korra, both animated TV series created by Michael Dante DiMartino and Bryan Konietzko. On March 5, 2014, part two was released on March 5, 2014. It will take place after the events of the comic Avatar: The Last Airbender - The Search. This is followed by the Smoke and Shadow trilogy. Overview The Rift shifts its focus back to a 14-year-old Avatar Aang as he begins the process of creating Republic City, unlike The Search, which focuses more on the story of the Fire Nation royal family. Aang also plans to play a bigger role to Toph, who was absent from the Search trilogy. This is followed by Smoke and Shadow. As Avatar Aang and his friends prepare for a festival in Yangchen, an Air Nomad holiday that has not been celebrated for more than a century, Aang receives mysterious visits from the spirit of Avatar Yangchen. [1] When these visits lead Aang to a refinery in the sacred land of the Air Nomads, the gang suspects that the refinery is responsible for pollution of a nearby river. [1] The decides to investigate the matter Quickly find themselves in a dangerous encounter with a malevolent spirit bent on destroying the human world. [2] At the banquet celebrating the formation of Yu Dao's new coalition government, Aang has a vision of Avatar Yangchen, the former Air Nomad Avatar, and inspired him to celebrate Yangchen's festival, a celebration honoring Yangchen's alleged defeat in a strong dark spirit. He brings Katara, Sokka, Toph and Air Acolytes along, but tensions soon begin to emerge between Aang and Toph, after Aang clings to the next tradition of the festival despite not knowing his goal of reminding Toph of the lives of his controlling father. Continuing the festival, the group discover much of Aang's horror that the city has a large crystal refinery built in a meadow where the next stage of the Yangchen Festival traditionally took place, despite the land sacred to the Air Nomads. Exploring the refinery engineer, Satoru, whom Toph is about to develop a fascination with, the group discovers that it uses both new technologies as well as three of the world's bending styles, making it the first joint venture between nations in the Avatar world. Aang is concerned that a nearby river has been polluted by the refinery and continues to see visions of Yangchen persuading him of the impending danger arising from the construction of the refinery. When Aang tries to voice his concerns, a dispute begins between him and Toph; Aang is upset that the refinery and the city was built on holy ground, while Toph, fascinated by innovations, multicultural character and prosperity of the refinery, has no problem with its presence. Furthermore, he rejects Aang's warnings about his visions on the grounds that he does not know exactly what will happen. When Aang points to nearby pollution, Toph confirms Satoru's claim that the refinery is not responsible, leading Aang to suggest Toph is lying to protect him from crushing. The argument ends when a series of earthquakes threaten the lives of refinery workers and asks Aang and Toph to work together to prevent anyone from being injured and minimize the damage to the refinery. After the danger is over, Toph suggests that Aang is trying too hard to cling to the past, prompting Aang to suggest that Toph is trying too hard to run away from him, which Toph claims he has no choice. At this moment, the owners of the refinery – Satoru's uncle Loban and Toph's father, Lao Bei Fong – arrive on the scene, and the novel ends with Toph and Lao re noticing each other. Part two Lao claims that Toph is not his daughter and tries to get him, Aang and their friends are escorted out of the refinery. After the battle of the Rough Rhinos, a group of former Fire Nation soldiers now serving as refinery safety, the group goes their separate ways; Aang, originally intending to confront Lao and Loban on refinery construction, convinced the Air Acolytes to continue Yangchen's festival. Toph decides to confront his father, while Katara and Sokka decide to discover a hidden cave that was unveiled during the battle. Traveling through it, they realize that it leads to an underground iron mine, which turned out to be the source of both earthquakes and pollution. During a celebratory meal, Aang is able to contact the spirit of Yangchen, who reveals that in the past he has fought a strong spirit called General Old Iron to prevent him from destroying a city that once stood in the refinery's current location. Old Iron initially sought to eradicate people, believing that the existence of ghosts would be threatened if not controlled, but was dissuaded by his friend and fellow ghost Lady Tienhai. After Tienhai's death, allegedly as a result of the city's people, the Old Iron tried to avenge him by destroying the city, but Yangchen made a deal with him that prevented him from doing so. Before you can explain the terms of the deal, another earthquake disrupts the holiday meal, which ends the vision. Elsewhere, Toph talks to his father and tells him about his role in training and helps Aang in order to get him to see who he really is, but after he does not make an answer, he decides to have nothing to do with it. At that moment, Katara and Sokka arrive to try to convince Lao to empty the iron mine, which is dangerously dangerous. It turned out that Lao knew nothing about the iron mine. Loban operates it in secret after Lao felt that extracting the iron would be too dangerous. As they try to evacuate the workers, they are attacked by a member of the Rough Rhinos, causing a cave that traps almost everyone in the mine. Toph manages to save the group from being crushed to death with her earthbending and metaldoming, but she can't move the huge amount of land away from them, and Aang can't help her, given the large amount of iron ore mixed with the earth that she can't move in her earthing. Part three People trapped in the mine are saved by the efforts of Aang and Toph's metalbending students. Before they arrive, Lao makes amends toPh and apologizes for his past actions. The rescue revealed that iron ore was actually General Old Iron's armor, which he dropped after making a deal with Yangchen. Loban, after finding that all the iron had been dug up, is trying to escape with it to the Fire Nation. At that moment, the storm begins to form. Aang tries to re-contact Yangchen through the festive meal, but discovers that a vase is crucial in the ceremony destroyed by the earthquake. Remembering what was said earlier, Aang reunites with Avatar Roku, reconciled with him in the process, and is able to speak to Yangchen, who explains the full terms of his business with Old Iron: In exchange for the ghost that left the people alone, Yangchen erects a monument to Tienhai, land in that natural state and keep it free of human civilization, to prove that humans can preserve and protect. Yangchen created the festival to secure the end of the deal even after his death. Yangchen declares that by breaking the deal, the Old Iron will return to wipe out humanity. Aang is preparing to destroy the refinery and the surrounding city, believing that doing so will restore the business and convince Old Iron to leave, but he has stopped Aph and his disciples, who assume that Aang will once again try to hang on to the past at the expense of the future. The two are fighting, but they are disturbed by the arrival of the Old Iron, which prompts Toph to team up with Aang to fight him. Toph and his disciples use their metalbending to rip the old iron off his armor, and Aang inflicts a mortal wound on the spirit to prevent him from killing Toph. As it fades, Old Iron complains that there is no longer a place for ghosts in the world, and that the Avatar is always sided with people against the ghosts being a man himself. Declaring it human nature to dominate, Old Iron nonetheless admits defeat in Aang's hands before it dissipates. Toph thanks and hugs Aang for saving him and his disciples, while Loban, who was nearly killed on the return of the Old Iron, reconciles with Satoru. Lao convinces the rest of the refinery to stay with him and rebuild it. Aang is troubled by the words of the Old Iron, but Katara assures him that if he has a place in the future of the world, ghosts need one. During a visit to tienhai's monument, soon after, Aang is visited by the reincarnated Tienhai, who enjoyed the way people develop the old city when they were their age and were fascinated by their creativity and ingenuity. Finally, he fell in love with the prince of the city, and took on a constant human form to be with him; his death was simply his mortal body, which died in old age and then reincarnated. He argues that contrary to Old Iron beliefs, that human nature is created, is not dominated, and that there will always be a place in the world of spirits as long as people are willing to create it. He further assures Aang of his faith in a possible human civilization that can preserve and protect, even as it grows. Finally understanding the balance between conservation and evolution, Aang recreates Yangchen Festival as the new Spirit's Friendship Festival. Team Avatar and the acolytes, including Loban, who joined their line, gleefully engaged along with the townspeople three months later.
